Winter 97.-Spring 98 (2019)-Mon.13:30-17:30

Kharazmi University

This course continues the basic objective of Listening and Speaking I in helping you improve your ability to listen to and speak in English. To this end, we will emphasize on the English used in and for both academic and non-academic settings. A variety of high-interest topics and materials which focus on an array of themes, techniques and strategies in both these contexts will be covered. Using them, you are expected to expand your listening and speaking ability in greeting, explaining, apologizing, arguing, narrating, inviting, as well as talking about celebrations, clothes, preferences, events, messages, plans, famous people, habits, decisions, and problems among others. Also, you will work more on some learning strategies including making predictions, distinguishing main and supporting ideas, understanding Straw-Man arguments, understanding and using analogies, taking notes, understanding and constructing pro and con arguments, listening for chronological order, listening for signal words, recognizing digression, and paraphrasing. Hopefully, you will be able to enrich your passive and active vocabulary, too.

All students are required to:

- send their emails to me (htmu88@yahoo.com) with this phrase in the Subject line of their emails (KHU-LS2-W97-your name)
- attend the class regularly (there can be scoring penalty for absences),
- form groups of three,
- have, at least, one class presentation on one of the following topics,
- prepare a presentation word list before their presentation,
- prepare the report/recording of the class discussions,
- watch the assigned movies (at home) at the beginning of the module,
- prepare a movie word list before discussing the movie in class,
- participate actively in the group and class activities,
- be ready for possible quizzes,
- transcribe the assigned listening units,
- prepare and hand-in a group project on one of the suggested topics,
- do and hand in the assignments introduced during the term on time.

Your final evaluation will be based on both the above requirements as well as your final examination.
